Wallsburg community bestowed 1993 "Citizens of The Year" title on Paul and Maurine Carlson.

4 Aug 1993

If hard work is what it takes to make a couple, then Paul and Maurine Carlson fit the plan. For themselves or for others, it was always the same, they work for satisfaction and not fame.

Between the two of them, Paul and Maurine have helped neighbors when there was a need. They raised a family of girls and boys, helping them through all their bruises and breaks, then lost one, which makes their heart still ache.

The family outings were spent hunting, and teaching the children to shoot. Some say, other "lessons were learned by the feel of the boot." With a house full of boys, they ate a lot of deer, while the beef stayed fat in the pasture. Meat and potatoes were always in the house to eat, but at the ward parties, Maurine's pies were the treat.

Paul and Maurine have served all their lives in their church. Relief Society, Bishopric, a mission, and Temple.

They love to eat fish, but won't take time to go "fishen". With a large family and grandkids galore, they love helping them, and teaching their favorite chore. Anyone and everyone found a place at the Carlson table, no one was ever turned away from their door. During the summer months, they spend their hours in the garden and flowers.

In years past, they helped with the Wallsburg July 24 celebration, furnishing livestock and cooking up hash. A "thanks" and honor plaque for the two, recognized their achievements during this year's pioneer celebration.

Informal Meeting: Division of Wildlife Resource representative Dwight Bunnell will conduct an informal meeting Thursday, Aug. 5, at 7 p.m. in the Wallsburg Town Hall. Bunnell will lead a discussion of concerns and how to position for future wildlife management in the Wallsburg area.
